

Advanced Standing and International Transfer Credits

Admissions - Supplemental information for applicants

Webster aims to recognize students who have high achievement in rigorous programs during prior studies. We recognize several national examination systems, curricula or exams for which students can earn the equivalency of university-level credits which give them advanced standing toward their degree.

International transfer credits will be awarded based on students' grades and the level of the study.

Credits for consideration include:

- International Advanced Standing from specific national programs (various)
- Advanced Placement Credits (AP)
- International Baccalaureate (IB)
- General Certificate Exams (GCE)
- Global Assessment Certificate (GAC)
- Accredited University Transfer Credits

If a student has graduated from an advanced-standing program in their home country's high school, they may be eligible for transfer credits.

In Switzerland, for example, up to 32 credits (equivalent to one year of bachelor's study) can be earned for the Swiss maturité. Credits are awarded for passing specific subjects.

Those who earn the French baccalauréate can also be considered for credits for specific subjects and grades.

Guideline for GAC Transfer Credits

Advanced standing and international transfer credits may be directly applicable toward the Global Citizenship Program (GCP) or as elective credits needed for graduation, for example. Some may also apply toward a major within a particular discipline.

This can reduce the number of courses, terms or semesters of study that are required to finish the bachelor's degree. Upon admission, academic advisors will guide you on how your credits will apply toward specific degree requirements or as electives toward your total credits for graduation.

Students who have completed credits at an accredited international university as part of a secondary school experience may also be eligible for International Transfer Credit.

A preliminary evaluation (estimate of applicable credits) can be offered to students based on their application; however, students must be fully accepted to the University (final graduation, exam results and all official documents received) before a final evaluation can be made. Upon enrollment at Webster, the official process begins for the awarding of credits, which go onto the student's degree audit in the Webster system.
